Learning for the Digital Age is a professional development initiative for Ohio's K-12 teachers that explores the critical thinking, creativity, collaboration and communication skills students need to be effective in today's classroom and tomorrow's workplace. Beginning with a brief overview of 21st century skills, participants will see a series of demonstrations and participate in hands-on learning activities designed to prepare students for the educational opportunities and job opportunities of THIS generation.

This five-hour professional development session will immerse K-12 educators and administrators in the what, why and how of using technology to foster skills for the digital age: communication, collaboration, critical thinking and creativity. Participants will explore teaching resources and engage in activities that align with current academic content standards and model effective strategies for successful integration within existing curriculum. Interaction with technology and multi-media will allow for opportunities to plan and practice for immediate adoption in the classroom. Through this combination of hands-on exposure to the latest in educational technology and evaluation of best practices related to the use of the technology, participants will walk away with the knowledge to create learning environments for the digital age, where students will acquire and develop skills for success throughout life.
